NEWS SUMMARY.

—A Knoxville, Tenn., special says that Gov. Brownlow announces his determination to call out the militia force to suppress the lawlessness and violence, which he says exists in certain parts of Middle and West Tennessee. He does it without Legislative action, but relies upon the loyal people of the State to sustain him. The Whig publishes a letter signed by the Tennessee members of the House and Joseph S. Fowler, of the Senate, urging him to this course.

CONGRESS.

Washinoton, April 3c.

SENATE.

Mr. Summer's resolution centuring Mr. Nelson came up. After Mr. Nelson had made some remarks, disayowing any intentional disrespect for the Senate, but admitting that he referred to a duel, Mr. Johnson moved to lay the resolution on the table, which was agreed to; 35 to 10.

Mr. Summer offered to amend by making the bours from 10 o'clock to 6. On motion of Mr. Tumbull, the whole matter was tabled; 37 to 17.

Mr. Evarts resumed his argument. He held that it was a grave reproach upon the wisdom and foresight of the framers of our Government. To claim a decision in this case in favor of the President would result in monarchy. In his view, the danger was to another of the balances of the Constitution, namely, the relations of the weight of numbers and equality of States, irrespective o't population. From the principles of the Constitution, namely, the relations of the weight of numbers and equality of States, irrespective o't population. From the principles of the Constitution, namely, the relations of the weight of numbers and equality of States, irrespective o't population. From the principles of the Constitution and the utterances of the foremost distinguished statesmen, it was evident that to make the Senate executive instend of advisory, was to rob the people's majority of their rightful power. In this manner the small and thinly populated States would control the will of those who cast the overwhelming majority of their rightful power. In this manner the small and thinly populated States would control the will of those who cast the overwhelming majority of the sealer Adams, Roger Sherman and others, and enforced it by considering various emergencies which might arise under the tenure of offices act, which makes certain offices permanent, and render removal during the session of the Senate difficiency of the proper opportunity as a privileged question to refer to the offices of the Senate difficiency of the imperation of the proper opportunity as a priv which might arise under the tenure of office act, which makes certain offices permanent, and render removal during the session of the Senate difficult, if not impracticable. He proceeded to quote from debates in the Senate, when the bill was under consideration, the language of Messrs. Williams, Howard and others, to show its effect was to revolutionize the practice of the Government, and he quoted an expression to the effect that while the legislative construction had little weight, yet the decision of the constitutional questions by the supreme laws were authoritative.

Mr. Evarts contended however that the decision of Congress of 1789 were not only authorative, because confirmed by the Supreme Court, but carried immense weight of themselves. He reterred to the debates of 1789 as exhaustive of the subject of power of removal, and claimed that the point at issue was settled and firmly established then by the framers of our government and by the framers of our government and by the framers of our government and by the practice of successive administrations afterwards. He also referred to Mr. Websters declaration in 1835 that the question was settled, and to the endors ment of President Jackson's re-Mr. Websters declaration in 1835 that the question was settled, and to the endorsement of President Jackson's removal of Duane by the people, the superior power of all. In regard to the suggestion that the Congress of 1789 was influenced by the high confidence in President Washington. Mr. Evarts asked if it were not possible that the present Congress had been influenced in an opposition by its opinions on the incumbent, the President. He read from various cotemperaneous writers to show that the importance of the question was deeply felt at the time, and that the effect the decision reached in 1789 was thoroughly understood. He claimed that the recent law had been in direct contravention of the decirine

OTTAWA, April 30.—In the House of Commons, last night, Mr. McDougal, of Nova Scotia, moved the Repeal Resolution, and delivered a speech upon the state of feeling in Nova Scotia, hinting that if the people of that province were not freed from the Contederation, blood-shed might be the result.
